

Project Healthy Neighbors: Bringing Health Services to Hundreds of Homeless

2009-11-18

Project Healthy Neighbors: Bringing Health Services to Hundreds of Homeless: A mobile health clinic called Project Healthy Neighbors set up for three days in front of Casa Esperanza to provide different kinds of vaccines, counseling and medical attention for the homeless. The project, which began five years ago, was designed to bring much needed medical attention closer to the people in need and also to curve the amount of health related deaths among the homeless population. A pair of new shoes and a backpack with supplies was given to each of the homeless who got checked, received the vaccines and participated in the clinic.
